Dear Homeowner,

Over the past few months, progress at Lansum Elena has moved from being something we describe to something you can clearly see.

With each passing floor, the towers are beginning to take their true form on the skyline.

As of this update:

- Tower A has reached the 9th typical floor
- Tower B has reached the 11th typical floor

When you compare where we were just a short while ago to where we are today, the difference is unmistakable.

Then vs Now: A visible shift

The comparison of earlier images with current site images tells a clear story.

What was once at transfer level is now multiple floors above, with both towers rising steadily and consistently. At this stage of construction, scale and height are now tangible and distinctly visible.

A few months of steady progress

Construction update

Key Progress:

Typical floor construction continues at a steady pace across both towers.

Tower A - 9th typical floor slab laid

Tower B - 11th typical floor slab laid

What this stage means

At this stage, construction enters a phase where consistency becomes the defining factor.

Each floor now follows an established cycle, allowing both towers to progress in a predictable and controlled manner.

As more levels are completed, coordination between structural works, services, and execution teams begins to align more closely ensuring that progress is steady and systematic.

Tracking the rise

Going forward, we will continue to track the progress of typical floors in each update, giving you a clear and measurable view of how the towers are rising over time.

With each level added, the structure becomes more defined, and the pace of visible progress continues to build.

Additional visual progress

The structure continues to take shape with each passing floor

Next up

- Continued upward progress across typical floors in both towers
- Core structure advancing in alignment with slab construction
- Increasing on-site activity as multiple workstreams progress in parallel

With the towers now rising well above the initial structural levels, progress is a continuous, visible process.

We look forward to sharing further updates as Lansum Elena continues to take shape, floor by floor.

Thank you for being part of the Lansum Elena journey.

With the structure now progressing steadily upward, we look forward to sharing clear, measurable progress - floor by floor - through the year ahead.
